Brain Waves from an Alien’s Radio

Shaina Monet

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarworks.uno.edu/ellipsis

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://scholarworks.uno.edu/ellipsis/vol44/iss1/13
Brain Waves from an Alien’s Radio
Shaina Monet

Vassar Miller Poetry Award Winner

On antenna systems, Feynman notes: “Ours is one of the simplest possible ones; we can make them much more complicated, and by changing the phases in the various antennas we can send the beams in various directions and send most of the power in the direction in which we wish to transmit, without ever moving the antenna!”

— The Feynman Lectures on Physics, Vol. 1, Chapter 29–4, Two dipole radiators

Not sleeping under this window, me, as the trees outside peek through lantern light and bamboo slats.

the blind’s bunched strings illume. sleeping troubles me most at night, because I suspect

I have not met the right doctor yet the trouble with thinking at night about the day I thought

I would never sleep again is how it felt, how it feels still-life like now.

I am afraid and say so.

Because I cannot remember every body and every thing I have known, and done, nor what they have done to me and mine, my mind is likely to twist one thing into another—twine so sound sews in two syllables the way I’ve imagined a knot—Tonight, trouble sneaks in, asks me what if

Ben didn’t hang himself from a tree?
the blind’s bunched strings illume. Because negation is a rope I can hang myself with,

I have trouble in my body. nights inside the refrain of proper nouns, troubled sleep and me, as troubling as Ben who’s passed himself and passed past