(as if only we've come back again)
by Michelle Antoinette

... found bleeding into a swarm, a step away from a pit—empty tuna cans and condom wraps or to build a fire ask for this Secret Crick

a lip-locked slither prying mountains' gritty fold, dragging mountain down to this twice
-told shore, a dam, poise in the tented pitch —listen slept on splintered ground when we woke. This was how the river broke.

When the copperhead, when the meadow bows, slip into this handsewn skirt of ivory and sunset and lapis lazuli and we'll cross the tributary by foot
