ABSTRACT

“Sweet Black Pussy for Sale” sets the stage for this very feminine and colloquial laced collection of verse. Both figuratively and literally, the voices of a seldom-traveled African-American culture are depicted through these songs. In this thesis, I consider myself a GRIOT, sworn to tell nothing but the truth.

These poems speak from places some might consider sacred and others quite sinful. These poems moan out the anthems of those unsung heroes and heroines from my family lineage. The voices of my long dead grandfather, grandmother, aunts and great uncle haunt poems such as “Blues,” “Salvation,” “A Memorial for Lawrence,” and “Apartment 12 B Dwight D. Eisenhower Street.”

These poems say, “Even when it’s sunny on the other side of town somebody could be wearing a frown. It’s because the blues don’t mess with folks who ain’t got anything to lose.”
PREFACE

My Block, My Street, My Peeps

There had to be an understanding that NOW the address must be to blacks; that shrieking into the steady and organized deafness of the white ear was perilously innocent; was “no count.”

~Gwendolyn Brooks

This is my street. You will embark on a journey through shotgun homes. You will meet a few of my neighbors. Open your eyes; pay attention to the people. Watch and witness the happenings on street corners and stoops. A woman’s story waits behind each address. A woman, in one abode, yearns to make love. She is ready and willing. She is void of taboos. If you are nice, two doors down, a woman will slip you the recipe to keep your man at home. In another’s hair are African secrets. These secrets have traveled from slave ships to cotton fields. This woman has evolved into an Oya archetype. She is a goddess of change. The sassy woman, returning from her husband’s funeral, is packaged in the outerwear of success. In honor of freeloaders she has prepared the inevitable “bullshit feast.” Her game face is on. These divas can silence impotent men. These divas speak in Standard English and can articulate their pleasure zones. They have earned the right to advertise via sensual discourse.
Nevertheless, there are also women staggering through the flip side of life. These women wear the scars of false hope. These women now dedicate themselves to neighborhood escapism. Some of these women will tell you, off the record, “Crack took the love out of black families.” These women fearlessly look the sins of men in the eyes. Yet, they blame “girls” for growing up and out fast. They blame “girls” for acting like women. They give men a pass. Men, in the eyes of these women, have an inherent need to stick their “thangs” (every fifteen minutes) somewhere moist. These women’s opinions might surprise you.

There are also, among these women, entrepreneurs. These women own stores of separatism. These explorers came in search of the AMERICAN DREAM. They borrowed a page from AMERICAN HISTORY and oppress as a means of remaining culturally pure.

You will find, as you exit, a lonely blue house. The occupant’s favorite color is blue. There are blue shutters, blue sheets and an empty blue pocketbook on the bureau. This woman is the most contented of all.

I can only defend these women now. I want to give them voice and yet try not to judge them. I listen, I laugh, I cry, and I rejoice with them. These poems are snippets into their lives. No, I do not mean to say these poems will not survive the ruins of time. I just feel that today my passion lies in the defense of trials and tribulations haunting my psyche at present.
Tomorrow, I might come to see the world differently; I may travel an opposite street. I may get up the nerve to introduce you to others. For now, these poems have assembled themselves. They have spoken through my ancestral altar and offered “Eyife” (a definite yes) for their uniformity. These poems capture brief images of bluesy people. They capture my ritualized travels through New Orleans.

In recent years, while I have been composing these portraits and monologues, the University of New Orleans has easily guided my voice down this blues path. I am immensely thankful to the CWW Instructors who coddled me during my tenure. I was encouraged to “say what I meant” and “mean what I said.”

Two specific poems included in my thesis that I feel represent the ideology of individually imbedded within New Orleans women are “Salvation” and “A Memorial for Lawrence.” The poem “Salvation” pays tribute to a woman’s refusal to lose her man to a young neophyte’s charm. The vixen is a woman barely crawling through the intricacies of vodoun. Yet, she will find, not every woman scorned will suffer under her covers:

so i reckon you’ll be wantin your last supper shrimp creole            my treat seasoned in a broth of menstrual flow whilst yo heart simmers pastor fae say one swallow of red rain will put a lover’s charm to shame by mornin you’ll see lucretia in my eyes and realize i’m the only woman runnin            to

In the work “A Memorial for Lawrence” we have the widow Elouise who has loved hard. In a times of grief she assumes a staunch “Don’t start none, won’t be none” sassiness. For her, it is never a question of whether she loved Lawrence. She loved him wholeheartedly and expressed it in her decision to take his ashes on a holiday:

i saw my friend’s smile widen we held hands and sobbed tears of redemption
after the last uninvited guest departed the premises me and ela dranked two pots of coffee and danced to bob marley’s guava jelly fourteen times
falling among the heavens in search of peace and solace…

The prominent women of “Salvation” and “A Memorial for Lawrence” represent the hallmark of “feminine” survival. In “Salvation” you have a woman refusing to accept a defeatist attitude. She will out-hex the “other woman.” She will use every trick in the book to keep her man glued to her hips. In the poem, “A Memorial for Lawrence,” Elouise is a woman coping with the death of her husband. She is a woman surviving a community of instigators. She has a steel tongue that is ready to defend her focused attitude. Both women are diva-esque warriors wielding a sword and a mirror. They are women adept at turning any negative into a sweet reward. They are women who will never let the block see them sweat.

These poems were written as monologues because these women demanded a monologue’s freedom. They need you to accept their reality unfiltered. In order to understand these women, listeners must sit and meditate on the tales offered from their lips.
Only dramatic monologues could invoke their spirit with such intensity and passion.

The poet Ai has often said that the first person voice is the strongest poetic voice to use. It was during experimentation with this voice that Ai first fell in love with dramatic monologues. It was such a passionate love that no human concept of emotional or physical love could compare.

I also fell in love with monologues after writing the poem “Salvation.” Through dramatic monologues, I am able to divulge my character’s moral thought processes. I am swept into the character’s realm of realism. I set sail across uncharted waters. I wait for the sound of unfamiliar voices and let my pen do what it must. I savor the journeys to come.

At this point, in my writing career, I thank my UNO family but most importantly John Gery, Bill Lavender, and Kay Murphy. I thank them for giving this poet purpose. From this MFA period on, my subject matter will pay homage to my culture. I am a writer. May my ancestors be pleased. May this circle never be broken.

what lucretia doin to us with her grinnin eyes lyin through her gap-tooth sighs got you wanderin round with a flashlight at daybreak neighbors whisperin she got roots on you sayin she ridin your soul outta control with those wide hips

under our bed there are three packed suitcases an envelope with nine hundred dollars a one-way train ticket to the crossroads and a brown paper bag concealin a fifth of gin you ain’t nothin but a man on the verge of sin

where this is headed ain’t nothin left to take back ain’t nothin left to pack i ain’t got no more tricks up my sleeve

Beware a black woman’s hair, Such ancient secrets buried there A Memorial for Lawrence when lawrence died elouise braxton sank herself into the recliner by the window elouise an always gracious figure wore a black pantsuit that hugged her figure tighter than bergman and bogart’s embrace during the last seconds of casablanca which coincidentally is the final memory i have of thursday night movie fest a weekly event i had shared with elouise and lawrence for the past eight years now i stood at the entrance to the kitchen watching elouise gaze past the congregation storming up her driveway and through an open door masquerading their stomach’s acidic distress as each prepared to recite eloquently memorized words of condolence in exchange for food and drinks without a word elouise politely pointed them to the kitchen where i had taken a turkey from the oven and replaced it with barbecue cornish hens i watched elouise rise like a high note from minni rippleton and pace the floor smiling every now and then when handed a sympathy card i watched lawrence’s two daughters from his previous marriage ask elouise what were her plans for their daddy’s restaurant now that he was gone elouise rolling her eyes while sipping a concoction of vodka and lemonade and pointing them in the direction of the kitchen as the youngest one sighed and under her breath mumbled “She probably gon sell it and give the money to a much younger man” elouise jerked the young instigator by her arm and when i heard a neighbor yell for mrs. elouise to calm down i stepped from the kitchen to the door way i moved no further than that elouise was known to swim with ease through her own sticky situations when i saw the girl’s arm in ela’s hand i was sure the stitching in the sleeve of the young woman’s dress had suffered a slight but unnoticeable tear it had to under elouise’s grip elouise stared at her in the eyes and told her “baby you ain’t woman enough to tangle with me now your daddy dead but i ain’t so if you keep talkin like you talkin you gon find yourself with a fist in between your teeth ain’t nobody and i mean nobody do you hear gon disrespect me in my own house now go feed your face” elouise adjusted the young woman’s dress and told her how pretty she looked in fuscia and the young woman walked away tottering on her very high heels the young woman’s older sister whispered “girl you gotta be careful with crazy people cause they will snap on you in a second” elouise grinned walked over to the mantel and ran her fingers across the curve of the sterling silver picture frame holding steady the picture of her and lawrence on their wedding day as she called to me to look with her “lynette’ remember you took this picture girl it seems like we just married like we just moved into this house it ain’t right i’m ten yrs older why didn’t i have the heart attack why’d it have to be lawrence he was fifty-eight-years old lyn it ain’t right” i excused myself from elouise i wiped my hands on my apron and slipped into elouise’s bedroom to find my purse to take my last glucatrol tablet worrying about elouise made me absent-minded of my own life threatening illness when i returned ela had walked away from the mantel and back to the window “you see that freshly mowed lawn lyn” “yeah i see it “ i gurgled between gulps of cranberry juice and the after taste of chewed medicine “we were gon plant tulips out there me and lawrence we even talked about sectioning off a spot for a garden with tomatoes cucumbers radishes lawrence loved the shit out of cucumbers you know” ela whispered “we never went on a honeymoon “ “what you say” i screamed trying to look surprised i had heard ela tell this story so many times but i didn’t mind so when she said we made plans to go this summer i smiled so now she said in her sassy ela tongue “i got two first class plane tickets to jamaica and i’m one person short i wonder what lawrence would do if it were the other way around” “i bet he’d go” i had stumbled upon the words like a drunken fool while lighting a cigarette retrieved from my apron elouise laughed making conversation with her self “he probably would go lyn say lynette don’t you have some vacation time coming up” “yeah” i hesitated wondering if elouise was hysterical all the while trying to run from her wounds “well you wanna go to jamaica just us girls” “ela you sure you up to it” i retorted as if her timing was impulsively weird which it was “lynnette i need some time away from this house from these people and i’ve decided to sprinkle lawrence’s ashes along the beach or in the ocean” ela giggled “just as soon as i can get these hungry ass mutha fucka’s out my house ima pack” dragging out the sensation buying time for my mind to catch up with my vocal cords i threw in the reverend wilkins clause my last loophole what about rev wilkins counseling session “if you go you gon miss that” “girl please rev wilkins ain’t gon tell me how to grieve” elouise laughed cautiously between words i’m doing just fine i asked ela if she wanted a cup of coffee we sat down me on the sofa and she in lawrence’s chair where we talked for hours as guests stacked plates up to their chins looking every bit as sorry for ela’s loss but eager to feast on home cooking that didn’t leave a sink full of loitering dishes bleeding over onto their own kitchen counters through it all ela and i talked about how much she loved lawrence and about how she wanted him to experience jamaica since it was all they had talked about for the longest she laughed briefly when she wondered how their adopted son lawrence jr. the same young man who had taken it upon his manly shoulders to arrange the funeral how would the dutiful lawrence jr. take to the news of her hopping a plane to some exotic resort the morning after his fathers funeral but she decided it was best to leave him a letter in his room i told her lawrence’s daughters would be furious she looked at me with her half smile and said “they is lawrence’s kin my blood don’t pour through them conceited ass veins” and for a moment i’d forgotten about lawrence’s death

and after the last uninvited guest departed the premises
ready and willing to take flight among the heavens

folks was running in and out sylvia’s apartment i’ll tell you fancy boy like i told the last reporter that came knocked on my door see cause of what happened i’m still not the woman i use to be death and neglect right here on poor eisenhower street now you wandering round  mr. newsman in search of the same story here you is waking my chow chow matlock up you shoulda been round that week when so much racket was going on made me lose track of who was over bidding who on bob barker white girl thought just cause her sweat-shirt say U C L A she would know how to out-bet a retired garbage collector shoot! that half dead black man said forty thousand and she said something crazy like eighty five thousand and you shoulda seen what they was bidding on five trips to countries i can’t even begin to name or better yet spell oh! they also had a cypress high-bar a mahogany eight piece dining set and a big screen color tv to make a long story short the garbage collector found out he ain’t need no confused alphabets on his chest to take home two showcases ha! ha! see before sylvia’s unfortunate happenings shoot! me and bob would never lose sight of each other use to be when i’d go to the doctor’s office it’d be me and bob barker sometimes i couldn’t even hear when the receptionist was calling my name “mrs. wanda harrison,” she’d smile while exhaling hard into the palm of her hand that receptionist always putting on she’d try and behave like calling me all them times didn’t worry the “you know what” outta her huh! huh! and me at the grocery store prior to this atrocity why that was even worse honey i’d push bob around on my portable tv the same television my son bought me honey my grocery cart would be screeching aisle to aisle of course nothing’s going in or out but air ain’t that something i done lost my thoughts now what was i suppose to be going on about oh yeah sylvia that young woman from across the street well when i see channels 4, 6, and 8 parked out front my door i had to catch the goings-on well i am eisenhower street’s neighborhood watch block captain and shoot! don’t nothing big ever happen to us retired folks i tell you since they built them fake ass “condominiums” as them shifty-eyed white contractors call them excuse my french and moved all those don’t want nothing out of life people in by here we been getting some criminal looking misfits all over and don’t get me wrong even though most of them are victims of the projects closing down gentrification ain’t that the term for it and before you print any of this listen up i know better than anybody since my best friend was born and raised in the projects not all people who live in the projects are torn down and dilapidated like folks think besides i done seen white folks living bad as bad and sometimes worse off than black folks and don’t nobody degrade them cause they live in government subsidized housing they get food stamps and free health care too they shopping at payless and gators and proud of it now ain’t that something i done lost my thoughts again we is suppose to be talking about sylvia like i was saying before newspaper people were poking around like a pulitzer prize was buried somewhere beneath all that rubble better known as sylvia’s home newsmen were like addicts fighting to get in hoping to see anything dead or bloodied what i saw from the police wasn’t no better kojack wanna-be’s social workers pretending to be mother theresa and all sylvia’s relatives traveling from god knows where to weep everybody always says they don’t want their fifteen minutes of fame but given the chance we’ll just bout kill each other to be noticed by somebody other than the mama who brung us in this world them people performed carrying on wailing fainting and wouldn’t you know it two ambulance companies had to scrounge up all them busybodies with their broadway theatrics i used to see sylvia’s boys riding their bikes up and down the street and their sister barely walking sitting in her swing rocking back and forth while mosquitoes and flies taunted her i’d wake mr. harrison up after he watched his baseball game he loves himself some barry bonds anyhow i’d tell him how sylvia is such a terrible mama letting them children play out in the street all hours of the night he’d just turn the television up and tell me he was waiting on the nightly news and i’d tell him “ventress as neighborhood watch captain it is my duty to keep watch you heard that my job is to watch over the neighborhood and those children they are part of this neighborhood too” he’d laugh and say “well mrs. harrison i ain’t made not one promise to nobody i’d be block lieutenant so don’t go delegating to yours truly a job involving me telling them children’s mama to put them to bed i mind my business and madam captain you should mind yours” about five minutes later he’d walk his i’m-just-doing-this-cause-you-love-everybody’s-children walk over to ms. sylvia’s house they’d have words she’d slam her door ventress would come home turn up the news and a few seconds later sylvia would pull that swing inside then walk to the corner to retrieve her children and close her door for the night sometimes I thought she trying to be a good mother she just doesn’t know how to love them children right she more than likely didn’t have no tutelage herself few months earlier sylvia had brought home this man looked like a crack head to me they’d be all out in the middle of the street almost having sex his hands down her tight knit pants her hands in his boxers course you could see his ass crack with all that sagging mess being in fashion then her man would back sylvia up to the porch heist her legs in the air like the street was their bedroom ventress found the scene funny he always had an excuse he’d say “them young folks they don’t have no inhibitions sex ain’t nothing but a roll in the hay” i personally found the whole sight downright disrespectful one sunday sylvia come strutting her size zero up the street toting a grocery bag and before her left foot hit the bottom step that man starts out her apartment sweating like he been jogging in the sahara desert then he commences to shaking and sylvia acting like they a real family asks “What’s the matter hubby?” and he turns around picks her up by the neck starts squeezing her throat hard sylvia’s a dark skinned girl but guess what she began turning blue and that’s when he screamed “bitch where is my stuff i need my stuff where you take it” before i could think straight i had done run across the street mind you still in my sunday school clothes and slapped him upside the head with my king james version he dropped sylvia like she a rag doll and headed for me i yelled “ventress open the door!” and next thing i knew my front door flung open revealing ventress nathaniel harrison cocking his shot gun like clint eastwood in one of them spaghetti westerns when sylvia’s man heard that sound of death ready to march his ass home he smiled and backed up holding his hands in the air as if to say i surrender when i saw sylvia smoking crack i blamed that no good man the one i slapped with my bible but then he left and some other man moved in with elevated problems to take up where the first left off only this one had a name lee mason brown wasn’t gon be no slapping upside the head with a bible for this joker unless the bible was made of pure lead word was spreading that lee mason brown had served time for manslaughter he had gotten out cause of some attorney slip-up anyhow they quickly became a match made in hell the more doped up sylvia got the more unkempt her children became lee would beat her like he was muhammad ali and she was sonny liston those children were so scared of him and they’d hide behind that oak tree the one on the corner of eisenhower and general macarthur they’d spy for when he was going or coming six and seven years and even at thirteen months old those children had more wits about them than they mama 2 when did i notice her weight loss well to be honest my son my only child had a baby my first grandchild when you have kids you see how pretty they can make a day god knew what he was making when he made children i can go on and on about that grandbaby of mine i’m sorry you got to excuse me my mind ain’t what it use to be i wander for no reason at all you had inquired sometime back about her weight to answer you about sylvia’s weight loss i never did notice the weight loss until too late she always kept herself thin as a ritz cracker to begin with and i was so full of lamont jr. i didn’t want to see nothing else i do remember the day mrs. lula may billings she a widowed woman lives two doors down from me she got robbed one afternoon i felt so bad an eighty-year-old woman robbed by some fool who ain’t know lula may don’t keep nothing in her purse cept maybe popeyes coupons receipts for the tax man and an extra set of dentures the ones with her six fake golds and one gigantic fake as-the-day-is-long diamond crucifix i laughed hearing my friend shirley act out lula may standing by her powder blue ford ltd shirley say lula was sucking her gums while shaking her head in pure disgust and all she could whine out was “wait till that fool son of a bitch see he broker than he was before he took my purse” that incident was what finally woke me up i realized i had been neglecting my post maybe i could have save lula may’s purse if only i had opened my eyes wider than for that baby so insteada fussing over lamont jr. all day i would put him to sleep and watch the block i studied the block two weeks before i realized those kids had stopped leaving home not even to ride their bikes and sylvia she was getting that free look like a woman who ain’t got no responsibilities i know it cause my sister owned that look for years my sister katie would drop all seven of her children off in my lap “go play in aunty wanda’s nice pretty living room” that was her take these kids so i can take a load off my shoulder speech all them years dealing with katie i can spot that look in the dark sylvia went somewhere one day came back home about noon hair down her back wearing clothes that didn’t know who was wearing them cause they woulda crawled off that body back to the mannequin i mean she was looking fancy and happy and free too strange for me to let it go ventress thought it best i make one of those anonymous calls to child protection but i wanted to talk to sylvia first see if mother to mother we could have a sit down maybe solve this together so i just strolled all innocent and sweet with a plate full of fresh baked chocolate chip cookies just as the door opens i managed to see diapers everywhere and the smell it almost made me faint sylvia snatched the cookies from me in record time and lee mason brown ate about seven of the twelve cookies as fast as he could right in front my face then winked and said “thank you neighbor” as sylvia tried to find holes wide enough for her big head to wiggle every excuse imaginable when i asked where her children were finally she resorted to “mrs. wanda they where they at in they skin go mind your business old wrinkled face bitch” after her tirade i went back to my kitchen i had to grab hold of the counter i even had to shut off bob barker woman’s intuition was screaming something’s wrong so i went and called the police you ever smell death mr. reporter the stench will itch your nostrils till you ain’t never the same what took place in sylvia’s house no human being should endure black white purple tan yellow green with the police came a carload of social workers not long after them i saw sylvia’s mother uncle young sister her daddy and his new wife lee mason’s wife and so many people i lost track ventress was out back on the patio listening to npr lamont jr. was reclining in his bassinet by the window for ten minutes i watched through the window when that red head from channel 4 News ran out sylvia’s house complaining about the stench that’s when almost one event behind the other a body bag came out on a stretcher then another and another i ran to the yard woke ventress and told him “my lawd those babies is dead!” when ventress got his faculties straight we put baby Lamont in his stroller and walked ourselves over there sylvia sat in a police car yawning high as a goodyear blimp i could see it in her foaming mouth then hooping and hollering for lee mason brown i overheard two policemen after exiting sylvia’s house “this ignorant ass broad went and murdered her babies by starvation physical mutilation trauma to the head with blunt objects broken bones cigarette burns some shit look like somebody been trying to iron on their backs that’s one crazy bitch” the other cop chuckled “What can you expect from a crack head and where she going she gon get just what she deserve” ventress kept shaking his head i couldn’t help but imagine them poor babies crying pleading for food pleading for somebody to stop the pain i’ll tell you before them bodies came out three male officers big body builder looking men tried to get away from that house wiping their eyes balling in tears i saw on the news the children had survived on feces roaches and rats lee mason brown said he was innocent he said them kids wasn’t his responsibility said children was the reason he had left wife he was trying to get away from his own two kids looking for their mama’s attention all the time lula may shirley ventress and i say sylvia got a lotta susan smith in her some say she killed to please lee mason brown to have him believe he was the center of her world after the last body the thirteen-month-old came out we wanted to blame lee mason brown for giving sylvia crack course the mother’s always last to blame social workers told us they’d be around if we needed counseling they passed out cards asked us to schedule appointments one male social worker said “dealing with grief alone can become overpowering” after all that mess i went inside and me and ventress smoked damn near a pack of benson and hedges well i’m feeling right tired now and ventress is screaming “let those children go to a quiet rest do forgive me lord” for constantly speaking of the dead you have what you need looky there ventress done taped the price is right but i just don’t have the strength to hoop and holler now days he think if i allow myself my old routine i’ll feel the old wanda i’ve come to realize i can’t no mo live out them contestants lives for them by shouting at the television screen than i could have saved them poor babies by putting their oversized mama cross my lap and spanking the daylights outta her just wasn’t gon happen sometimes in life we win two showcases and other times we barely make it out alive we spend our fortunes listening to folks with nothing on the line cept their need to be winners my will to live through the tv has all but subsided i done seen enough true to form showcase showdown with unpleasant results before i close my door mr. reporter those children deserve a proper home going they was just children who didn’t have no choice in the matter of what woman was to be their mama make sure when you title your story you let folks know this sylvia mess was my greatest sin i often wonder why i hadn’t been nosey enough sometimes it pays to be a busy body but my mind is wandering again well i got drug free zone signs to hang don’t reckon they’ll do much good from what i see everybody’s got one they like toothbrushes you know what their intended purpose is but sometimes they get overlooked the only difference is one will give you a rotten set of teeth the other a decayed perspective on living well so long and i’ll be looking in tomorrow’s paper for a picture of my street you have a blessed day now cribs

the newspaper reports about the r & b mega superstar somewhere in his home near the catskills not the home in detroit he shares with his wife and four children but the home with the four hundred thousand dollar recording studio and the jacuzzi that waterfalls into a granite pool the home with the gucci rug and armani linen with the indoor nba regulation-sized basketball court the home where he can make love on marble tile and scrutinize his performance from one of his twenty-four concealed cameras while somewhere a cd of his voice echoing the theme from his latest concert in calgary provides the soundtrack as he urinates on the faces of two fourteen-year-old girls after anal intercourse — he spills his semen into their mouths like a rupturing volcano and then lovingly he begs each girl to swallow he drives the girls back to an undisclosed location near a bus stop or a shopping mall where he offers each two hundred dollars in five dollar bills tickets to his concert and a backstage pass the woman on the bus behind me peers over my shoulder to read the article out loud “humph!” she sighs, “that’s a damn shame railroading that young brother we black women always airing our dirty laundry we got to raise our daughters better than that at my church we sing that boy’s song during communion last sunday after the first refrain bout three sinners converted so don’t tell me he ain’t been touched by god that boy got to have some good in him everybody got some inkling of good by the way you ever really listened to his lyrics you ever really looked at a fourteen- year-old’s body they so overdeveloped these days get fuller figures than most women my age he just a man and we all know the nature of men remember jim baker clinton woody allen remember sodom and gomorrah remember lot and his daughters so what if he did what they claim them reports don’t mean nothing every saint know what it feels like to be a sinner” Tam Nguyen: An Immigrant Woman’s Recollections

Owner On Break Store Open In Half Hour

cross street locking shop door closing shop for break my friend marta castro it is our time we will sit you know we will talk the weather’s fine so we will spend whole day with pictures from our old countries still too much family there too much blood to be removed forever marta will sip and let me do what all mother’s do well hang grief out to dry marta immigrant like me except she from honduras she make dresses for fancy parties rich white people come often to buy her long flowing dresses she even put real flowers down middle back of dresses orchids the smell like baby laughing after mouthful of goat’s milk everyday we take hour break we talk me mostly she bring fried plantains and i fix café sua da we drink whole pot in thirty minutes we clear mind we fuss fuss fuss neighborhood crazy place to be immigrant like when high school girls got mad at marta for having dresses cost six hundred dollar even on sale black girls have no money to buy so they throw open coca cola cans in marta store coca cola waste all over clearance rack and marts sewing table marta cry and clean mess and cry she was broken in more places than heart marta almost close business for good but i give her advice she immigrant woman like me we only want chance to survive i tell marta to lock door when she see black girls coming up street close store at three fifteen when school let out turn off all lights      i say and reopen two hours later by that time the black the african-americans are on their way home marta business better now no black problems cause she take advice      advice i learn from experience marta sewing machine can hum out new dress in peace now white people can buy pretty dresses taffeta organza silk satin marta’s rainbow gowns brighten store entrance      and entire block my store doing good too my children are my greatest concern living in new country i talk to marta she good at listen she sit quiet let me squawk on my children rob me of kind words most days worry worry worry my son most of all his eye so full of black girl even in AMERICA
i prisoner to worry ah      the good part is this store pay mortgage and one day it will make my family rich like marta customers      that kind of rich rich enough to avoid black problems as fast as you blink eye today opportunity sweetens my café sua da it is opportunity i savor slowly and swallow with pride threaten us because of beer police give us citation because of beer because black boys go to high school and should not be drinking beer      it’s law and who am i they mother to ask for ID beers make us good money second you ask for ID you make no money i know this neighborhood      look around beer no problem      beer is heaven yesterday      for third morning this month my daughter’s cat started hissing so loud whole house wake up cranky i find out later when i go to put out bowl of milk the cat was hissing at hungry baby some mother buried from sight      her child beneath cartons of dated shrimp fried rice      yacamein bony remains of buffalo wings      barbecue ribs and molded bread african-americans think our sign NO BABY DROPPING PLEASE placed over the dumpster is how you say off/en/sive but any mother who puts her baby in garbage with cord still attached is no good to society anyway have you seen frozen baby starring back at you i have last winter trust me dead babies bad for business that was all people around here talk about for days dead baby and then police police start driving up and down street parking in front our store scaring our regulars african-americans ey don’t like the police officers snooping around so they go shopping at other stores for long while afterwards we make little money african-americans look at us like we stuff baby in dumpster my mind tells me those babies belong to some of their school girls since african-americans have high school nearby and many pregnant ones come in here hungry for our combos foot long hot sausage on French fries and coke for three dollars fifty cents they like to drink sodas at breakfast times my husband and i smile at them but mostly we smile when their money drops into our hands in few weeks we’ll have enough money saved to buy ding ho our son a car just for him my two eldest daughters kim and minh have one now here at store nhu and i pretend not to understand english so we do not have to talk to african-americans anymore than to tell them we are out of tampax or colgate or which aisle the ramen noodles or pork and beans are on or quote price on pampers sometimes we sell one for a dollar today angry words came from me to one boy customer who tried to change price not always but it may or may not have fallen off during kim’s or minh’s stocking you never know i saw one of those black i mean african-american boys remove the price from a 6-pack of milwaukee best to 6-pack of coors when i told nhu he ignored it since we are not supposed to sell them alcohol anyway so nhu decided to sell all beer one price filling one barrel at a time mixing cheap beer with more expensive beer “it really doesn’t matter when throats get dry they’ll drink whatever is cold” nhu is so wise we have even mastered limiting our conversations to no’s and yeses along with loud gibberish that scares them but means nothing in vietnamese and since they know nothing of our language we can talk about how much the males would rather buy beer from us and hang out in front our store smoking marijuana and roughhousing than go to school and more they smoke more they want food and more they roughhouse more they want ice-cold beer they love us for letting them be big men today i whispered to my husband how real estate agent was right about this location america is truly land full of how do you say pros/per/i/ty i forgot to take off my six-carat diamond wedding ring before work i sleep with it at night if i hold it out from under blanket it looks like fallen star besides i haven’t many places to wear it between here and wholesale store sometimes i wear it to children’s school plays or grade meetings but i am never to wear it at work and for such inattentiveness this morning my husband nhu scolded me while ringing up a pregnant girl’s (breakfast combo) fried egg bacon, rice over ramen noodles with fruit punch soda for two dollars something new he put on menu just yesterday in honor of final mortgage payment on building next door he bought for our eldest daughters kim and minh building will be nail salon and they( kim and minh) are so happy barely seventeen and businesswomen already ding ho has set his sights on clothing line the boys in this area love his dragon art t shirts and jeans nhu wants him to learn accounting to manage books and stop learning all that street english nhu was born in laos our children have adopted laotian but speak vietnamese as well the way they teach english in american school has been not easy on my children but they survive enough college in america is no longer a dream i fear at times my ding ho desire to become like them talking so easy to blacks about rap music while they scream loudly in grocery store to ding ho who sits behind crowded dry goods counter spraying a design onto black boy’s jeans african-american boys think ding ho japanese they get mad at ding ho when he completes a design for them they refuse to pay him they say ”stupid jap you think you bruce lee one day we will bomb you out of here” and ding ho is confused by his friend’s choice of words as if they even understand cost of war scars separation from home and family my father die in vietnam war my two brothers die as soldiers and my sister die of syphilis take some american soldiers with her too war so long ago we have new life new stories begin here you know i walk to ding ho every time those friends will not pay i wrap my arms around his neck and lovingly scold him for being too hungry for acceptance these people are customers not friends i make ding ho promise if african-americans can’t pay him their clothes must go on sale same day agreed my poor boy explains to them my rule instead of making them see his ways he defies the mother who gave him birth and lowers his prices to whatever black boys leave in pockets after beer and combos settle in their stomachs i show him my disapproval in how i ring up that elderly black woman who cannot decide between epson salt or mineral oil nhu believes lay-away creates too much paperwork you can either afford something or not he says ding ho has to learn if he wishes to be his father’s successor i knew if ding ho begged nhu long enough nuh would give in to ding ho’s plan for store of his own now after four weeks ding ho has corner building no more working behind grocery store counter now his store next to the girl’s salon nuh kept building to store boxes today ding business man ding ho showed me drawings he is trying to choose a logo he has even decided to sell children’s clothing i want him to be successful but arranging friends with these people could be his downfall he is too eager to meet african-americans demands i spend all day watching over ding ho how gentle he is with that small space as if it were woman stroking paint on wall waxing floor on his knees slowly meeting the curve of each square with a grin he winks at outcome and speaks to air i overhear him mumble something my worst fear clarissa a forbidden love hardest to prune at root the black girl clarissa is college student who has found her way into my son’s heart six months i try and ignore signs

maybe ding nice to her for business but her roots too deep

i have placed cinnamon sticks in ding ho’s shop it is still empty but the boxes are here to keep it company along with the cinnamon the smell will keep it sweet and welcoming ding is hopeful that he will be open week from today one hundred flyers met eager hands ding ho wants me to be happy for him and offers me a cup of ca phe phin and a bowl of rice dumplings i ask him “if i am to never worry about you then am i still a mother it is part of my job to nurture through worry these two motherhood and worry these two are sweethearts i worry when i have no worries” he laughs we eat and drink but worry is never far from my heart that i cannot smell its scent clarissa through the cinnamon’s aroma i know she has been here all the while in ding ho’s mind erasing my memories my daughters come to see me just when ding and i were snacking they tell me that they want to go to cosmetology school ding smiles knowing i am displeased so he takes leave back to his unpacking it is his goal to have bronze dragons crimson fires thirty two t-shirts and jeans finished for the big opening girl’s business has been making so much money they have given up hopes of medical school instead they want degrees in business nhu will voice his displeasure i explain to my daughters some day we will own a large grocery store or even a warehouse this neighborhood is full of dangerous people and we must not get comfortable here at times it is war zone and we are foreigners to rights and wrongs of these people these blacks these women i say to my girl’s those black women whose nails you clean and polish today are just paying bills your destiny not here i have to make them feel foolish enough to forget this and not bring such thoughts to their father’s ears nhu’s his scolding would be long and hard i made them promise through tears of resentment they will go to medical school in exchange for my not telling nhu

almost dawn we hear a noise in the kitchen of the store nhu takes shotgun from under the counter and tells me to open the door then move away i do and nhu aims gun at ding ding ho in embrace with black girl her high cheekbones and dark skin almost glowing in moonlight’s shadow “don’t shoot it’s me and clarissa” ding ho screams different she may be not completely lost to the world of her people i heard her talk about how she is studying to be a social worker but her kind of difference is not what ding needs her skin is all wrong she shouldn’t try to trap my son because her own men are useless i am heartbroken by the sight of clarissa nhu is worse than angry he says to me in private “ding ho should be asleep he is a business man no longer boy” why black girl in our shop after closing hours is no secret  love can not hide itself even in dark room she tells us  she was just leaving and while ding ho walks her to her car nuh promises he will talk to ding about black women how they defile their bodies how they are temptresses who see men like him and will want what we as a family have worked for the reason we left vietnam in search of america land of riches untold nuh will tell him to find a nice vietnamese girl at his school or perhaps he will tell him to write home and bring one here as wife  that would be most appreciated he will tell him how these women (black women) like their men can not be taken seriously they are incapable of love and hard work nuh will say  to blacks love and hard work are distant cousins cousins on opposite sides of the world i will talk to the girl see to it she never in ding ho’s company again i will make my words humble as her money is always appreciated i will take fears of black girl clarissa to sleep i will pray often my family not be scolded by our ancestors for forgetting blood of our blood  during trung nguyen before morning rush of black students with money to melt away like cotton-candy we count our blessings this store these children this neighborhood in that order we understand now  no reward in America without sacrificial lamb blues

if I had a nickel for every one of my blues I’d be the richest woman in the graveyard
